Harris County Judge Ed Emmett and Houston Mayor Annise Parker will join with other local, state and federal officials this afternoon to announce the opening of the area's first mobile disaster recovery centers to assist victims of the recent Memorial Day flooding.

Two recovery centers will be operational by Friday afternoon, one in Meyerland and one in Spring Branch. The mobile units will provide a central location for those hardest hit by recent flooding to file and process the necessary paperwork for assistance, as well as a place to get answers about how to access that assistance.
